

Administrative staff exchange

IARU Staff Development and Exchange is an informal program to provide greater professional and personal development for IARU colleagues performing administrative functions. Staff will benefit from spending time at another university where there is significant opportunity to share with and to learn from counterparts.

Staff from IARU members who seek to learn from partner institutions and build a network of international peers can join this Exchange. Current examples of staff development and exchanges have included:

- co-location whereby an IARU member hosts a staff from another university who will also continue to work for his/her home university;
- exchange whereby a staff from an IARU member takes a role at another university for a year; and
- visiting staff (or sabbatical) whereby a staff from an IARU member visits another university while on paid leave from his/her home job.

Staff Development and Exchanges expands and deepens staff members' knowledge about each others' universities and strengthens the Alliance. Such interchanges should be self driven and initiated by interested staff members themselves. Rather than formalizing the forms and types of programs, the Alliance will continue to encourage staff to take ownership of their own development.
